

Communication and Social Contact

This course deals with face to face interaction in natural settings. Interest will center on the components of the communicative act, the variables and models of interaction analysis, and the natural units of interaction for which a literature is available.

The bibliography below suggests the materials to be covered. Starred items to serve as a sample are on day reserve in RRR. The student himself will be responsible for a thorough reading exploration of the area in which he writes his term paper.
