Roscoe Drummond

LEI AND THE PRESS

WASHINGTON — A storm cloud is beginning to hover over the White House and the nation. It is not the usual storm cloud, but it is one that will bring much-needed, perhaps even painful, reform to the federal government.

The cloud is the result of the growing public dissatisfaction with the way the federal government is being run. This dissatisfaction is not new, but it has grown in recent years.

The storm cloud is not just a concern of the public at large, but also of the White House. The President, in his role as the leader of the country, is under increasing pressure to do something about the situation.

The President has a choice to make. He can either ignore the problem and hope it goes away, or he can take direct, visible, and regular action to address it.

The President does not have to announce his intention to the press. He can take direct action and then announce it later, if he wishes, providing little or no justification.

The President has many other burdens, sometimes an overwhelming number of them. But he must listen to the public and the press, because the decay of federal institutions is not only a concern of the public, but also of the President, who is responsible for ensuring that the institutions are functioning properly.

WHEELER-ROBBINS THEATRE

CAPT GHAIDABBA, M.D.,—Police have charged nine people with assisting the President in the White House.

The charges include bribery, graft, and kickbacks. The President was also charged with accepting gifts from foreign governments.

The charges are the result of an investigation by the Justice Department, which was also conducting an investigation into the Bank of America.

The investigation has revealed that the Bank of America has been paying large sums of money to foreign governments in exchange for favorable treatment in the form of loans and contracts.

The Bank of America has denied the allegations and has vowed to cooperate with the Justice Department. The investigation is expected to continue for several months.