LBJ AND THE PRESS

WASHINGTON — A storm cloud is beginning to hover over President Johnson's press relations.

You wouldn't call it menacing — right now it is no bigger than a man's hand. But the way things are going, it could easily grow and seriously darken the political weather in Washington.

What is happening is that Johnson is in the process of destroying the presidential press conference as Washington correspondents have known it for 32 years.

Because there are far more important things on a President's mind than press conferences and because the decay of the White House press conference was covered over by a long election campaign, it is possible that Johnson has not been acutely aware of what it means to have the press conference so stultified. Its near demise has crept up on everybody.

In the judgment of most Washington reporters and in the opinion of Presidents Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower, and Kennedy, the White House press conference is far more than a funnel for pre-cooked news.

Through the press, radio, and TV, it gives the President direct, visible, and regular communication with the people.

It provides the only means for face-to-face questioning of the President — respectful but informed questioning, candid but courteous questioning. The President does not have to answer, but he has to listen — and the public can decide whether he is prudent or evasive.

This may or may not be welcome to a President; it is helpful to the public.

The press conference is a window on the White House. The questioning enables the President to get a fuller picture of what is on the mind of the people. The public gets better insight into the mind and motives of the President.

A New Wax Museum Opens in Hollywood

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—Something brand new has been added to the Hollywood scene — another wax museum.

This one is called Tussaud's Hollywood wax museum and it is run by an Indian Sikh named Spooky Singh, no relation to Kuldip Singh, an Indian singer who caused a splash on the old Groucho Marx show.

Though it carries the name of the famed Tussaud tallow temple in London, there is no formal association between the two.

Mrs. Singh, or Spooky if you prefer, is house mother to some 100 figures, all life-size, 23 of which are movie stars — some quick, some halt.

The new wax works claims it is not in competition with the movieland wax museum, an older establishment located in Anaheim hard by Disneyland.

Still, there are cynics dedicated to the proposition that

If you've seen one wax museum you've seen them all. Tussaud's claims, and rightly so, that it is not limited to movie and television stars as is the Anaheim enterprise.

Its diversification includes figures of many American presidents: Washington, Lincoln, Roosevelt and, somewhat surprisingly, William McKinley, for instance, and not Pierce or Buchanan? Or Ruth-erford B. Hayes, it happens, sports a beard himself.

It also has a chamber of horrors with working models of torture chambers. Those old standbys, Lon Chaney, Boris Karloff and Bella Lugosi star in a monster section as the Phantom of the Opera, Frankenstein's monster and Dracula, respectively.

There are kings, queens and knaves from history and a sprinkling of religious figures. Movie figures are depicted in sets and costumes from their best remembered roles. Some are combined in a single scene.

MUSIC MAN
HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—Composer-conductor Fran De Vol begins scoring "Hush... Hush, Sweet Charlotte" for next year's release.

FEATURED ROLE
HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Dick Reeves, former singer with the Chicago Opera Company, landed a featured role in "Tickle Me" with Elvis Presley.

THE ALMANAC

By United Press International

Today is Saturday, February 6, the 37th day of 1965 with 329 to follow.

The moon is approaching its first quarter.

The morning star is Mars. The evening star is Jupiter. Baseball slugger Babe Ruth was born on this day in 1895.

On this day in history: In 1788, Massachusetts ratified the United States Constitution.

In 1850, American statesman Henry Clay delivered his last great speech on the floor of the Senate, speaking in favor of his compromise bill, which he hoped would avert a civil war.

In 1943, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower was appointed commander-in-chief of the Allied Expeditionary Forces in North Africa.

In 1964, Cuba shut off the water supply at the U. S. Naval Base at Guantanamo.

A thought for the day—Henry Clay said: "If you wish to avoid foreign collision, you had better abandon the ocean."

Bidding in Danger Spot Finds Cards

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

It's dangerous to step into the auction when both opponents have bid and your partner has passed. This situation is made to order for juicy penalty doubles, to say nothing of other dangers.

East's overall of one spade was of the dangerous variety just described. Since East was a cautious bird, his bid marked him with just about all of the missing high cards. East was not doubled for penalties, but he didn't get away scot-free with his dangerous bid.

East won the first trick with the queen of spades and continued with the ace of spades, forcing South to ruff. South didn't happen to be the best player in the world, and he would normally draw trumps and try the heart finesse for his contract. But South wasn't deaf, and East's bid made it a cinch that the heart finesse was not going to work.

Forced to look deeper, South came up with the right line of play. He drew a round of trumps with the queen and another with dummy's nine. Next he ruffed dummy's last spade.

PLAYS DIAMONDS South continued with the top diamonds and his low diamond. East had to win the third diamond with the queen. This meant that declarer would be able to discard one heart on dummy's jack of diamonds.

South still had one other heart to worry about, but East was stuck with the lead. If East returned a heart, dummy would get a free finesse; and if East returned a spade, dummy would ruff while South discarded a heart. Either way East's forced return would take care of one losing heart; and the jack of diamonds would take care of the other low heart.

South should play the hand just this way even if East passed throughout; if the plan failed, South could still fall back on the heart finesse. Still, how many players are careful enough to cook up such elegant lines of play unless the bidding warns them that finesses won't work?

DAILY QUESTION
As dealer, you hold: ♠ A K Q 6 5, ♥ K 8 2, ♦ Q 9 8, ♣ 4 3. What do you say?
Answer: Bid one spade. Your opening bid will locate the high cards if an opponent eventually plays the hand, but your opening bid may lead to a game or a slam. You are willing to take a risk when you have so much to gain. There is less reason to bid when both opponents have bid because it is so unlikely that your side can make anything worth talking about.

WHEELBARROW THIEVES

CAPE GIRARDEAU, Mo.—Five college students have been charged with stealing Elvis Presley's wheelbarrows.

Police here said the youths admitted they climbed the fence of the entertainer's Memphis, Tenn., home and made off with the wheelbarrows which were serving as flower pots on the Presley front porch. Police said the youths were seen carrying the wheelbarrows into their house.

THREW GEMS AWAY

LONDON — Mrs. Lee Hardy threw away a bundle of paper from her suitcase as she waited for a train in Dorchester. She had reached her home here before she realized she had thrown away $28,000 worth of jewelry wrapped in the paper. An insurance company has offered a $2,800 award for the recovery of the gems.

CRASH POSES PROBLEM

PLYMOUTH, England — An RAF Harvard plane, which was making a landing at Plymouth airport, skidded near the airport hedge and its wing hit a bus.

Police said it was "definitely not a road accident." Airport manager Wing Commander William Lucas disagreed with them saying: "The plane was on the ground, so it can't be an air crash."

IS HAZING LIMITED TO COLLEGES?
YES NO

Do birds have "national boundary lines?"

Yes, some species do, and especially during the mating period. They select a certain territory as their own. Any other birds that come within these limits will be attacked as though they were an invading army. But these same birds will not go outside their territories to attack. They are merely defending their own against external aggressions.

Are scientists essentially alike?

No. Important studies have shown that physicists, biologists and sociologists tend to have fundamentally different attitudes toward life and its problems. Even within the same discipline there are wide differences. For example, one nuclear physicist became what he and his fellows had created and started a program to use science to understand and ultimately to eliminate war. Scientists are as different from each other as are other people.

Junior Editors Quiz on PLANTS

QUESTION: How do plants grow?

ANSWER: There is an enormous variation among the plants. They range from such minute forms as one-celled algae to the giant sequoia and redwood trees, among the biggest living things. There are many different ways in which plants grow and new ones may be formed. The tiny cell of the algae splits into two daughter cells, each alike, and these grow into new individual algae plants. More elaborate plants, like the mosses, have leaves but only rootlets instead of true roots. Tiny spore cases on thin stalks appear; the end of the cap opens and minute spores drift out to settle down and start new plants. A great number of plants grow new ones by developing flowers which turn into seeds, and which grow new plants when they fall down on the soil. Plants can also grow in other ways. Pieces cut from a potato, provided there is an eye or bud, will grow into new plants if planted. Certain plants send trailing stems along the ground which develop roots and make new plants. We illustrate still another method. In (1) Judy has clipped a stem from a geranium plant. She is soaking it in water (2) so that roots will form and planting the clipping in a pot in (3). Now she has two plants. 2/6

FOR YOU TO DO: Green plants are very cheerful things to have around a house. Try Judy's system and your house will look gay and attractive. Be sure to wait until the roots have formed before planting in the new pot.
