City Shows Wisdom In Thinking About New Parks Now

At the recent council meeting, steps were taken to solicit input from the public on the development of three new parks. The proposals are for a small park in downtown Ada, a large park in the north end, and a small park in the south end. The council members were impressed by the diversity of the public's input and the need to consider the environmental impact of the projects.

Merhige's Harvest

I have been reading about the wonderful success of the wheat harvest in Oklahoma this year. The statistics are quite impressive, with a yield of 55 bushels per acre on average. This is a significant increase from the previous year, which was 40 bushels per acre.

On January 20, 1972, John B. Merhige, the president of the Oklahoma Wheat Growers Association, spoke at the Merhige's Harvest convention. He discussed the challenges faced by farmers in the state and the importance of continued support for agricultural programs.

Merhige mentioned the role of the federal government in assisting farmers during periods of low commodity prices. He emphasized the importance of stable markets and the need for policies that support farmers.

He also addressed the issue of water conservation and the need for farmers to be more mindful of water usage. The Oklahoma Panhandle, in particular, is facing water scarcity issues due to the prolonged drought conditions.

In conclusion, Merhige called for continued efforts to support agriculture and ensure a stable food supply for the state and beyond. He urged farmers to remain vigilant in their efforts to adapt to changing conditions and to work together to overcome the challenges they face.
