Well-Chosen Title

DR. ERVING GOFFMAN suggests that if anybody wants to learn more about the murder rates of the 30s, they should read a book called: "They Shoot Horses, Don't They?" One of the best titles we've ever heard.

DEPT. OF CURRENTLY needed information.

We can hear so many definitions of "yellow dog contracts," direct and indirect, from politicians, politicians and labor leaders we can't be sure exactly what the term means.

Here's a definition which is a little different from the rest, but which may be the best.... It's from Runyon and Gerald's book "The History of Greater American Rags." According to these outlandish authors, a "YDC" is a contract which provides that the employee promises not to join a labor union under pain of dismissal if he does.

JIM GILGUAN SAYS that our item not long ago about a swimmer being able to detect a leak in the ocean is correct. Steve Allen, without benefit of a gag writer, says one of the funniest things he ever heard was the remark made by the late Joe McCarthy when the Senate was asked what he thought of a recent poll, wasn't accurate before a committee hearing. The man: "I thought of the most of when I heard of," said Joe.

"It's tough that Allen didn't recognize that as one of the classic jokes..." outstanding Joe.

We are not saying that the Senate and the impressionistic actually made the remark, and he may have said it spontaneously without ever hearing it before. It's simply tough that Allen thought it fresh and new. We used it about a month ago, and we were discussing that delightful form of humor known as the Irish Joke. We find it linked in several joke books, with the laugh verification of its great age.

NEVER JUMP TO CONCLUSIONS.

For the example of our friends in New York, a man who was learning to be a very fine diver "in his back-yard, even though he has no swimming pool." Doubting that anybody could learn to dive by setting up just a diving board over a pile of sand, we called Art Olsen, who has coached many young divers into Olympic ranks—including his daughter Ann, the wife of big league baseball star Jackie Jensen. "Oh, absolutely, one of the best ways of learning fast," said Art. "No better way of learning the fundamentals—but get the feel of the mechanics so much sooner. We used to use one down in the '30s. We knew how well it worked and how well we used to return back to the pool. It's splendid for learning styles and techniques. I know of some divers who have gone from single to double somersaults—using a board over a sand pit. Even do tuck and somersaults. It makes them work—they know they can't have that soft water to fall into.

ARTHUR "RUP" TABER writes: "You know that those TV commercials for dog food are very funny—only pets know the class which have the funny announcer say that the cans are full of lean, red meat. Usually, the housewife who says that the cans are full of lean, red meat, is learning to be a very fine diver "in her back-yard."
